Modal lexemes need and beto essentially lose out to the semantic volume characteristic of other units. The main meaning that the modal verb beto has is the need for some action.

In addition, the modal verb described is used in the official speech and in the instructions, orders and television news releases when they describe planned events: All of you are to report to the registry office tomorrow morning (A. Golden "Memoirs of Geisha").

The modal verb need corresponds to the meaning "necessary", "necessary", it serves to express:

- a) the need to do something;
- b) the need for something;
- c) the momentary absence of need for something.

The lexemes described above are considered as the most frequently used markers for the values of necessity and must. As the above examples show, the content of the statement, and, consequently, the meaning of the modality category, directly depends on the communication situation.
